The aim and scope:

Brazil is permeated by significant regional diversities, as a result of territory occupation processes, predominantly on the coast. Given this, with the aim of improving regional development, promoting integration, sustainability and responding to society's demands, the session intends to discuss the scenario of transformations experienced in Brazilian postgraduate courses, culminating in the structuring of the Postgraduate Programs Network in Urban and Regional Planning of the Center North of Brazil (Rede Plur Center North of Brazil), with the Brazilian Journal of Regional and Urban Affairs (BARU) as a vehicle for the dissemination of scientific knowledge produced in the Cerrado and in the Brazilian Amazon. The session will therefore be dedicated to advances in knowledge and research perspectives in these Brazilian biomes.
